Course Description:

We are “beings unto death,” said the existential philosopher Martin Heidegger. Although programmed genetically at the cellular level, aging occurs with remarkable variability. Historical events, society, and cultural context influence everything from the meaning of growing old, when you become an adult, to the rate of age-related physical decline and disease. This course introduces students to this remarkable process of human aging with a special focus on the beginning and ending of adulthood. Some approaches to aging, called gerontology, focus on the period from retirement to death. Other approaches, called adult development and the lifespan by psychologists or the life course by sociologists, focus on the start of adulthood through the end of life. This course will take more of a lifespan and life course approach and begin with the transition to adulthood, which represents your (college students and others your age) current phase and challenge in the life course.

Required Textbooks:

Requirements: 3 exams (see dates in class schedule below) and a final exam on Monday, December 11, from 3:00 P.M - 5:30 P.M

You do not have to take the final if you are satisfied with the average of the first 3 exams. However, the final exam is cumulative and it will cover an equal amount of material from each of the three sections that comprise this course. If you can achieve a grade on the final exam that is higher than the average of your first 3 exams, I will use the final exam grade for your final grade. If your final exam is no better than the average of your first 3 exams, your final exam grade will be averaged in with the previous 3 exams for your final grade. Below is the grading chart. When you sign an exam or submit your assignments, you are pledging to the honor code: http://www.college.emory.edu/current/standards/honor_code.html.
